

Maureen OShea arrives in Devil Falls, Montana, to marry a man shes never met. When she finds out her intended had died before her arrival she is met with an uncertain future. She decides to spend the last of her funds by bringing culture to the western town in the form of a tea shop. It never occurred to her that the town preferred coffee. Not until the handsome blacksmith, Micah Webster so rudely points it out. Stagecoaches enroute to the town are being robbed and Micah is deputized to help. When Maureens life is in danger, he realizes the fashionable Irish lass has gripped his heart in her lace-gloved hand and things will never be the same. Can these two make their uncertain futures become one?
