

Death, from all indications, is the greatest mystery that human beings must face in this life. Death certainly has a strange way of drawing family members together while simultaneously revealing the fears, anxieties, insecurities and cultural superstitions which reside in the deep recesses of the human psyche. Death, in some situations, also reveals the deep-rooted anger, bitterness, resentment and hatred which family members have been carrying in their hearts for the deceased, but were never honest, humble or bold enough to confront the underlying issues when they had the opportunity to do so. Death is also the stimulant which activates the well camouflaged selfishness, dishonesty and greed components that give rise to vicious confrontations regarding the all-important Will, especially when the deceased had possessed substantial financial assets and significant real estate holdings. Some people are so frightened, terrified or mesmerized by the concept of death that they are unwilling to accept its reality and consequently they live in denial, like devoted Christian Scientist practitioners. Death is an appointment we can't run away from. It is an appointment that we must face. But it is an appointment for which we all of us need to be prepared. This piercing, provocative little book forces us to confront the issue of death -- face to face -- with the expectation that we will be inspired to confidently take hold of the eternal, abundant life which Jesus Christ so freely provides.
