

A celebration in photographs of the most spectacular of the world's animals and their environments. As we look into the new millennium we are in danger of destroying our planet's wonderful diversity of life. Art Wolfe has created this portrait of the animals that we still have time to save, examining those now considered extremely rare, and celebrating the successes of their conservation. Covering 42 countries across seven habitats, from polar to tropical, from oceanic islands to high mountains, he takes us to areas inaccessible to even the most determined of travellers. There are essays by leading naturalists and field notes for each photograph.

Over the past two decades, Lynx, a year-old woman, has lived in the forests in North-West America. She gradually abandoned modern civilization and learnt. Primitive survival expert Lynx Wilden takes a group of ten young people on a month-long journey in the Rocky Mountains equipped only with clothing and tools. 'My life is free, random and spontaneous. This in itself creates enormous energy and clarity in body and mind.' – Miriam Lancewood. Could you.

When a bomb exploded in his home during the Vietnam War, Ho Van Thanh grabbed his then-infant son and ran into the jungle. This week - Miriam Lancewood and her partner told their families they'd be gone for a year. But a decade later they're still living deep in the New Zealand.
