

For your inspiration and reading pleasure, another George MacDonald classic retold for today's reader by Michael R. Phillips. Perhaps more than any other MacDonald novel, this story manifests one of the strongest driving forces in his spiritual vision: the theme of godly service to the poor. The narrative centers around Hester Raymount, a twenty-three-year-old Londoner whose loving heart continually reaches out to God and to the poor in her neighborhood. Her benevolence is not without its price, however; growing up in an environment of strict social mores where faith in God was often more cultural than spiritual, Hester's choices concerned obedience to the gospel or conforming to the culture of her day. Scotland's master storyteller gives another vivid portrayal of the mercy and compassion of God as seen in the lives of those who truly know Him. Purity, corruption, innocence, deception, deep suffering, compassion—all elements combining to make MacDonald's characters from another era come alive today!

It fell to one of George MacDonald's lesser known novels, Weighed and Wanted, in Weighed and Wanted (here republished as The Gentlewoman's Choice in the Bethany House series of MacDonald reprints), this is the Michael Phillips. The Gentlewoman's Choice has ratings and 11 reviews. I find I prefer Michael Phillips's novels, which echo MacDonald's style with more storyline included.

He's also the editor of the popular GEORGE MACDONALD CLASSICS series. Phillips owns and operates a Christian bookstore on the West.
