

Imagine a race of beings very similar to humans, except that for 98% of the time they have no gender. There is no sexual competition, no homophobia, no excess of testosterone, no different genders to block the media channels with endless advertising for clothes, perfumes, make-up, and sexual posturing. In short, it could be a very boring place indeed. However, for a few days a year, and in special facilities set aside for such a purpose, hormones trigger the assumption of one of two genders for the purpose of mating. There is no way of predicting what gender the individual may assume from one year to the next. Once the act is past, they revert to being neuter, unless of course they happen to have fallen pregnant. In a very small minority of individuals, classed by their society as deviants, a hormonal imbalance causes them to assume and retain one gender from birth. They are cursed with retaining that same gender, every day, for the duration of their lives. For most it causes mental instability. For those who remain sane, they tend to be loners, often incarcerated in institutions. For a few, they manage to rise above the rest to become something special. Carby is special. Carby is also one of the few. He was born male, and will die male. As a result he is big. The hormones have made him taller and stronger than just about everyone else, which could be why he is so good at what he does. He is a Collector. A Collector is a kind of cop. He collects money from people who know perfectly well that they are no longer entitled to keep it. He's not an idiot. He's about the best at what he does in the Universe. He finds people who are trying to avoid him. Sometimes he kills them, but only when left with no choice. Gus, on the other hand, is an idiot, but he is a neuter idiot. He is also a thief and, because he's an idiot, he's not a very good thief. In fact, he's about the worst thief in the Universe. For a start, he always seems to get caught. Those things he manages to steal are either broken or worthless. Gus does not want to go back to prison. One day he steals a private space-yacht. This time, and for a change, he's successful - for about two minutes. The police find him and challenge him. Being an idiot, he does the last thing they expect, and runs for it - in the yacht. Being an idiot, the yacht he steals is very valuable - too valuable, because it is faster than the police. The insurance company employ the recently retired Carby to go and find him, to locate and seize the stolen craft and to bring back the idiot Gus, dead or alive. Unlike Gus or Carby, William Hardcastle is a human on Planet Earth. Unlike either of them, he has never been content at being what he was. Born male, he lived his life knowing he should have been female. He even tried to control those demons by getting married. It didn't work. In a moment of weakness, he went onto one of those websites. Yes, one of those. Law enforcement agencies were monitoring it, so passed the details to the local police in Scotland. He was arrested, but if his lawyer hadn't been having an affair with his wife, he might have got off. On his lawyer's advice, he pleaded guilty and received a suspended sentence. He then lost his job, wife and home, in that order. Left only with the clothes on his back and his beaten up old car, he was now on the edge, in many senses of the word. In his car he had pills, a gallon of petrol, a hosepipe and a bottle of whisky. He was parked on the edge of a cliff, and was trying to decide how best to end it all. When Gus lands the yacht on William's car, it sets off a chain of events that no one could ever have imagined. You see, used to dealing with neuter beings, the ship's medical computer tried to fix William, and that was the trigger for a whole new life for William.
